HUNTING WILD GAME WITH A CAMERA

Produced by the Ford Motor Company.

The wild goose, you know, is quite an aristocrat - spending his summers in the cool reaches of James Bay and his winters in the sunny South.

And on his way north, as if to cary the monotony of his long journey, he "stops off" for a visit with his friend, Jack Miner, at Kingsville, Ontario.

Now there is a reason for the visit of the Wild Geese to Jack Miner's - kindness, no shooting and plenty to eat.

Each year Jack treats his feathered friends with bushels of corn, so that when they resume their journey northwest the're as fat as a Thanksgiving turkey.

Several years ago a few geese visited Miner's farm. Instead of "shooting them up" as man is wont to do, Miner fed them.

Next year the same geese returned, bringing a few friends with them, until today thousands of them visit him each year.

Now Miner keeps a record of his geese, for each year he catches a few of them and places aluminum tags on their legs bearing his name and address.

In this manner he is able to identify the geese as they return each year.

And hunters in the gulf of Mexico and Indians in James Bay have brought down geese with Miner's tags fastened to their legs, for Miner has several boxes full of these tags returned to him by the hunters.

The geese have complete confidence in the protection Miner's farm affords, for here they may be approached at will, but try to reach them in the marshes a few rods away and your approach will be an immediate signal for their taking flight.

The gander is a staunch defender of his home and zealously guards it against all intruders.

It's a wonderful sight when the flock "gets up". Circling skyward they form all sorts of fantastic shapes and figures resembling a mighty fleet of aeroplanes.

When the geese are about ready to leave for James Bay the young robins begin to arrive and they, too, are treated kindly and fed regularly and presto, see what happens!

And finally says Jack

The birds are not wild, the're merely exercising their engenuity to escape from a wilder thing called man, who relentlessly pursues them with engines of destruction.

And unless we are to witness the extermination of some of the finest specimens of our bird life, we must enact laws necessary for their preservation.

Sayings of Will Rogers:

Will Rogers says:

Some people are against a large American army while others say keep all the second lieutenants in the service.

Prohib. has done one good thing for Detroit anyway - made 'em build a good road to Toledo.

If they allow a fellow as long to pay an income tax as they have Congress to argue what it is - rich folks ought to get off pretty easy.

The Victory Liberty Loan is going over big. The prohibs. were going to buy anyway and everything else is closing up, so what can a feller do?
